$1.50 Per Year In Advance

SUPERVISOR OF HOMER AND FAMILY HELD UP

After holding the families of N. L. and Barney Welter captives for three hours, Friday morning, three extortion bandits left the farm with $60 in cash, 5 watches and a double barreled shot-gun.

At 9 o'clock, these men came to the house, presumably to buy a duck. When Mrs. N. L. Welter went to the basement to weigh the bird, they seized her and told her to be quiet as it was a "stick-up". Then they went up stairs, seized Mr. Welter and tied him in his chair, then captured Mrs. Barney Welter, her brother, John Welter and Miss Cecelia Welter, also a resident in the home. Although very stern with the older members, the two small children of Mr. and Mrs. Barney Welter were treated very kindly.

For three hours, the gunmen threatened to torture their captives, burn their home, also shoot the children, if they did not hand over a large amount of money which they thought was in the house from the sale of cattle a week previous.

Near the dinner hour, Barney Welter came to the house and was tied up, as was also Joseph Pondkoski. When the entire house had been ransacked and much damage done, the gunmen cut the telephone wires and made their get away.

Police officials were notified as soon as possible but as yet, no trace has been found of the thieves.

Ford Talkie To Be Shown At Mokena School Auditorium

"These Thirty Years", an all star talking picture, presented by courtesy of Ford Motor Company is filled with excitement and thrills. It is a story that begins in a country town of yesterday and ends in a modern setting of today. You will sympathize with Dave and his aged mother when their farm and everything they own is put on the auction block to satisfy a greedy mortgage holder, but success favors Dave. He wins a race, driving a "horseless" carriage in a cross country race, with a horse driven by the dashing young son of a local banker and also wins the hand of pretty May Larcombe. What follows? Come and see the end of "These Thirty Years" to be sponsored by the Mokena P. T. A. Tuesday night, Nov. 13 in the school auditorium. Admission free. We'll be seeing you Tinley Park remained in the Republican column even tho Bremen township went Democratic in Tuesday's election. Out of 603 registered voters over 530 votes were cast. There were 280 straight Republican votes cast and 180 straight Democratic votes.

Orland Fire Chief Clears His Dept. In CCC Camp Fire

Halloween night a group of boys from the CCC camp at Palos Park were enjoying a party in the Timm residence occupied by the Schreiber family, when a fire broke out. As there is no fire department in Palos and due to failure to call the Orland Park Fire Department, the building located at 93rd and 119th street burned to the ground.

Thursday a former school building which some of the boys had fixed up for a hall, caught fire and was destroyed. A straw stack in the rear of a stable caught fire, but the fire was put out.

On Friday a military court of inquiry into the causes of the fires was held at the camp.

Fire Chief John Helenhouse of the Orland Park Fire Department was summoned to testify why the Orland Fire Department had failed to respond to the fire calls on the two nights in question. Chief Helenhouse very quickly proved to the board of inquiry that no one had called the Orland Park Fire Department on either night, but what really did happen was that someone called the Orland telephone office and asked that the fires be reported to the Pavillage board of Palos Park instead of calling the Orland Fire Department. On Saturday representatives from the State Fire Marshall's office called at the Camp to investigate the cause of the fires, but nothing further has been heard about the matter. Captain Kempton is in charge of the camp.

To Build Ramp For Kean Ave., and S. W. Highway, Orland

Cook County has set aside $10,000 for building a ramp north of Orland Park to join up Keane avenue and the Southwest Highway. Surveyors have been on the job the past week surveying for the site of the ramp. The ramp will be a big convenience and improvement. At present if one is driving on Keane avenue and they wish to go on the Southwest highway they must drive from Keane avenue east of Orland down 143rd street in to Orland Park before they can get onto the Southwest Highway.

Wolf Road Case Set Over To Monday

The same old story of stalling on the Wolf road case. Hearing was held Thursday morning in the Circuit court before Judge Wilson. The attorneys not all being ready to proceed the case was postponed again until next Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock. Judge Wilson said this continuance was final and that the case must come to trial Monday. There were several warm skirmishes between the opposing lawyers at the Thursday morning session.

Former Green Garden Resident Dies

Mrs. John Friedrichs, aged 70 years, died at her home in Peotone Friday morning. She was the mother of Mrs. August Schroeder and Mrs. Martin Koenecke of Frankfort. Mrs. Friedrichs was a native of Germany and came to the United States with her parents when 8 years old. She was married March 9, 1883.

Orland Woman's Club Meeting Interesting

Last Thursday afternoon, Nov. 1, in the Orland Park M. E. church, the Orland Park Woman's Club had a most splendid meeting.

Mrs. Ella Loebe, the president, opened the meeting and after the singing of the Star Spangled Banner by all present, she introduced the presidents of the visiting clubs, namely, Palos Park, Tinley Park, Crestwood and Brainerd. About 100 guests were present.

A special meeting of the Orland Park Club was announced for Friday, November 9th at 2 p. m. in the Creer Hall. All members were urged to be present.

Mrs. Loebe announced plans are being made to form a First Aid Class under the Welfare department. All intending to enter this class are to notify Mrs. Cox, the chairman.

Plans are also being made to have a class in crafts. This is most interesting work and it is expected many will join.

Another class is to be formed, that of drama, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Maddox. This it is hoped will interest the younger girls and women of the community.

The men are not to be overlooked and all men who would like to enter a class to study civic questions and problems of the day, are asked to register for it. This will prove to be very instructive.

Mrs. Loebe next introduced Mrs. Chas. Maddox, chairman of the Literature Department who in turn introduced Mrs. Wm. H. Walker of Midlothian, who is chairman of the Literature Department of the third district.

Mrs. Walker announced and spoke concerning the Fine Art Day Festival sponsored by the Art, Music and Literature departments of the third district which will be held in the Ridge Park Field House, Nov. 15, beginning at 9:30 a. m., and lasting all day. Anyone having old and rare books, manuscripts, pictures, etc., may enter them in this exhibit. Outstanding at this meeting will be the following: 10:45 forum "The Creative Arts in the New Leisures", "Waltz of the Flowers", in costume, 11:50 Dr. Preston Bradley will speak on "The Art of Reading." Luncheon will be served at 12:30. At 1:50 Louis Kamm, a Chicago artist, will speak on "The Artist in Twentieth Century Paris". 2:45 one act play; 3:15 fashion show.

Mrs. Walker next introduced the Brainerd Woman's Club drama department who presented two one-act plays "For Distinguished Service" and "One of These Days". The parts were very well played and were very much enjoyed.

During the intermission between the plays, Mrs. Leonard Headlum played a piano solo. After adjournment all journeyed to the church basement where tea was served. A long table covered with a linen cloth, graced with a bowl of lovely chrysanthemums and candle sticks centered the room. Mrs. W. R. Schussler, Sr. and Mrs. George Gee, Sr., noured.

A social hour where friends mingled and visited and partook of delicious cakes, wafers and tea, ended the lovely afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Friedrichs celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last year.

The couple resided on a farm in Green Garden township for 32 years, settling in Peotone 20 years ago. Besides her husband, Mrs. Friedrichs is survived by eight daughters, Mrs. August Schroeder, Mrs. Martin Koenecke of Frankfort, Mrs. Herman Templin of Harvey, Mrs. Noah Goodrich of Maywood, Mrs. Edward Bispig, Mrs. Emil Koenecke, Mrs. Arthur Bispig and Miss Leona Friedrichs of Peotone; one sister, Mrs. Mary Friedrichs of Monee; thirteen grandchildren.

BROTHERHOODS CONVENTION AT MOKENA NOV. 11

The Federation of Brotherhoods of the Monee Region of the Evangelical church, comprised of the nineteen surrounding communities, will convene in Mokena the eleventh of November (this coming Sunday) in the St. John Evangelical church. Mr. A. R. Edwards is president of this Men's organization.

The afternoon session will be opened by a welcome address by Lawrence Kohl, President of the Mokena Evangelical Brotherhood.

The meeting will come to order at 2 p. m. Two officers of the Federation will be elected at this meeting.

The speaker of the afternoon is the Rev. Dr. J. Darms. Dr. Darms was formerly the President of the Mission House in Wisconsin, an institution of the Reformed Church of U. S. He resigned this position to become the executive secretary of the Reformed Churchmen's League with offices in Philadelphia, Pa.

After the address of Dr. Darms there will be a Men's Retreat for meditation and discussion of the subject: "The Abiding Realities of Our Religion."

Supper will be served by the Women's Union of the Mokena church. The wives and families are invited. The services in the evening will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. E. Busekros will be in charge and Dr. Darms will deliver the sermon.

The large number of Evangelical people of this vicinity are fortunate to have the opportunity to thus become acquainted with one of the leaders of that church body with which the Evangelical church has united the past summer.

Hold Joint V. F. W. Installation At Frankfort

A joint installation of officers of the Women's Auxiliary and of the Wm. Martin Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S., of Lincoln Estates was held in the hall over the Frankfort Tavern in Frankfort Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Hinds of the Cantigny Post Auxiliary of Joliet was the installing officer. The Cantigny Auxiliary, Joliet put on the floor work. Mrs. Morrissey of Joliet was the conductress. Acting chaplain, Bertha Aggar. Acting patriotic instructress, Louise Bell. Acting musician, Mary Formento. Color bearers, Julia Hart Ann Leimbacher, Emma Weese and Mary Owens.

Short addresses were made by Mrs. Van Ham, past president of the Cantigny Auxiliary and Mrs. Lola F. Eastham, member of the National Council on Administration of Oak Park.

Grandma Niedringhaus of the Lincoln Estates was especially honored when she was called to the platform and was then presented with a beautiful bouquet of flowers by Mrs. Merle Hall on behalf of the members of the Auxiliary as a tribute of esteem.

Mrs. Rachel Slagle who was re-elected president of the Auxiliary, was presented with a past president's pin. The officers installed are:

President, Rachael Slagle.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, © Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for November 11

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN

LESSON TEXT—Galatians 5:13-26. GOLDEN TEXT—Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.—Matthew 26:52.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Law in One Word.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's One Law.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Be a Peacemaker.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Thinking Peace Instead of War.

Doubtless the thought of the lesson committee was to take advantage of this memorial occasion to inculcate in the hearts of the youth the spirit of peace which grows out of a heart of love. It should be borne in mind that this value can only be a practical reality as the people are brought into a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Love is the fruit of the Spirit made operative in the heart of the regenerate.

Paul, having shown in chapters three and four of this epistle that the believer is free from the law as a means of justification, in our present lesson makes the practical application of the doctrine. The divine method of doing away with war is to secure the regeneration of individuals.

1. Christian Freedom (vv. 13-15).

1. It is not an occasion to the flesh (v. 13). Liberty is not license. The notion that when one is free from the law he is free from constraint is wickedly erroneous. License of the flesh means not merely the indulgence of the flesh in actual sinning, but in the expression of a self-centered life.

2. By love serve one another (vv. 13a-15).

Freedom from the Mosaic law means slavery to the law of love. Love thus becomes the fulfillment of the law.

11. Walking in the Spirit (vv. 16-18).

This discloses the secret of how a life of service to another can be lived. Walking in the Spirit results in:

1. Loving service to others (v. 13).

2. Victory over the flesh (vv. 16, 17).

By flesh is meant the corrupt nature of man expressing itself in the realm of sense and self. The renewed man has two natures, between which is going on a mortal conflict. The Christian must choose between good and evil. Notwithstanding the reality of this deadly conflict, victory is sure if one chooses the good.

111. The Works of the Flesh (vv. 19-21).

By the works of the flesh is meant the operation of the carnal nature. The one who chooses to live according to the impulses and desires of his natural heart will be practicing the following sins:

1. Sensuality (v. 19).

The sins enumerated here are practiced in the body, and are:

a. Fornication (the word adultery is omitted from the best manuscripts). Fornication includes all sexual sins in the married and unmarried state. b. Uncleanliness, which includes all sensual sins, open or secret, in thought or deed. c. Lasciviousness, which means the wanton, reckless indulgence in the shameful practices of the flesh.

2. Irreligion (v. 20). These acts take place in the realm of the spirit, and are:

a. Idolatry, the worshiping of idols. b. Witchcraft or sorcery, all dealing with the occult, such as magical arts, spiritism, necromancy.

3. Sins of the temper (vv. 20-21).

These take place in the sphere of the mind, and are:

a. Hatred. b. Variance, including all strife and contentions. c. Emulations, including all types of jealousy. d. Wrath, meaning bursts of passion. e. Seditions, which mean factions in the state. f. Heresies, meaning factions in the church. g. Envyings. h. Murders.

4. Sins of excess (v. 21). a. Drunkenness, indulgence in intoxicating liquors. b. Revellings. Acts of dissipation under the influence of liquor.

All who practice such sins shall be excluded from the Kingdom of God (I Cor. 6:10).

IV. The Fruit of the Spirit (vv. 22-24).

This indicates action in the realm of life. It is the product of the Holy Spirit indwelling the believer.

1. Love to God and Man.

2. Joy—glad-heartedness because of what God has done.

3. Peace with God and Man.

4. Longsuffering, taking insult and injury without murmuring.

5. Gentleness, meaning kindness to others.

6. Goodness, doing good to others.

7. Faith, believing God and committing everything to him.

8. Meekness, which essentially means submission to God.

9. Temperance, self-control in all things.

Against those who thus live, there is no law.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—With assurance that Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of railroads, is going to recommend in reports soon to appear that there be more stringent regulation of the railroads, it is to be noted that Washington conversation lately has included a new idea respecting governmental relations with businesses coming under direct federal regulation.

The discussion seems to center about some idea concerning the obligation which government owes whatever business it regulates and whose profits it limits.

The talk one hears in many places is to the effect that if the government, or any government, lays down rules which prohibit a business from reaping the profits that accrue in good years, by the same token it ought to consider some form of compensation to that business in the periods of depression through such as we are now passing because it has refused to permit that business to create a huge layer of fat upon which it can feast in the bad years.

Advocates of such a theory, of course, have immediately found opponents. In other words, two very definite schools of thought have developed and although the question is nowhere near a solution nor is it likely that the forthcoming session of congress will even approach an answer, one can hear arguments pro and con on the point most anywhere the subject is broached.

The proponents of the theory that the government owes an obligation to those businesses which it has regulated within an inch of their lives contend that investors—which means the public who own shares of stock—are being discriminated against by their own government. Their claim is that a business cannot survive unless it is enabled to store away profits of the good years against which it may draw when the prolonged economic depression strikes. The result is, according to this argument, that unless the fat is stored away after the manner of the bear in preparation for winter investors can expect only to see their savings destroyed from time to time, and this with the sanction of their own government.

In opposition to this new theory of relationship between government and business, one hears the usual denunciations of the sins of the railroads and the public utilities, but one also hears complaint that if the federal government should embark upon a policy of compensating those businesses which it regulates, it might be placing a premium on mismanagement and even downright crookedness. It is argued likewise that the federal government must not use taxpayers' money in this manner nor that it should employ the policy of compensation, as that amounts to a subsidy.

At any rate a new field has been opened. On each side are to be found vigilant and virulent defenders and from this time it is made to appear that congress is eventually going to be compelled to decide how far this regulation of business can properly go. From all of the argument here, it would seem that each side has solid ground upon which to stand. It may be possible that from this controversy something in the way of a new economic policy will develop. The Roosevelt administration has gone farther than any other in history in its regulation of business and there are those who believe that a reaction is due. If that be the case, then it appears logical at least that the two opposing forces may bring about a compromise that will be favorable to general business, which is subject to regulation, and enable those who place their savings in stocks or bonds of such utilities to feel reasonably secure about some sort of an annual return.

Solution of this question of equity between the government and the businesses which it regulates is not as simple as it may superficially appear. For example, the question is put forward whether it is possible to evolve any method of measuring, even roughly, the extent of the public obligation. It is likewise necessary to determine in advance of a final answer to the question, whether the past inequities and past treatment of public utilities is the factor to be considered. There is a question whether the government is openly to assume a direct voice in the management of properties which it regulates if there is a compensating arrangement to protect investors in those businesses. Then, it goes into the question of government ownership or government control of private industry.

Some of the advocates of this program of compensation call attention to the public necessity for maintenance of service, such as the railroads supply, for example. In the case of the railroads and shipping, with perhaps the addition of the growing aircraft industry, it is admitted that there is a willingness on the part of those lines of commerce to aid the nation in time of war.

Should the government engage in distribution of taxpayers' money to offset deficits in the lean years, opponents of the policy say that we should be headed for an even greater bureaucracy than has been set up to accomplish recovery under the present administration. Obviously, many business men will not be in favor of further extension of bureaucracy. They have had their fill of bureaucracy under the codes and the Agricultural Adjustment administration.

The form of assistance is another problem. If it were not in the form of a money payment direct to the businesses concerned, then the subsidy must be worked out on another basis. It has been suggested that the regulations themselves might be used to enable some returns not now available. One theory advanced was that the regulations should be flexible and that in the lean years there be some relaxation of the restrictions so that the regulated businesses might proceed more freely in operation.

Another thought heard is that there should be consideration given to competing businesses such, for example, as is the condition between the railroads and the highway users. It is of record, of course, that trucks and busses and privately owned vehicular traffic use national and state highways, built out of taxpayers' money and they do so with the very minimum of taxation. The railroads, as competitors of these lines, have no such beneficent attitudes displayed toward them by the government which, at the same time, has been bearing down with its regulations. It undoubtedly will bear down further when the new Eastman legislation is enacted. So on whichever side of the argument one ranges himself, it is to be seen that there are numerous factors and influences to be considered and these, it may be added, are not questions soluble in one conversation.

As one looks backward upon the campaign of 1934, the methods employed by the two major parties appear

Both Parties Show Weakness

for parties appear in Washington, I believe, are of the opinion that the campaign developed an outstanding circumstance, namely, that the Democrats lack defensive ability and the Republicans have shown an utter inability as an offensive party.

In all of the debates and the speeches and the statements forthcoming from candidates on either side, there is proof of the conclusion above reached. Some political writers in Washington and some political leaders take the position that when the Democrats were put to the necessity of laying down a fresh program, they failed on the job. They gave the impression of politicians running largely on momentum.

The minority party, if such the Republicans may be called, was wholly unable to take advantage of known vulnerable points in the Democratic armor. The net result was obviously that there was much haranguing and much mud-slinging in what should have been real national issues, but nothing came of it.

The campaign, therefore, has demonstrated in my opinion the need for a strong minority party whether that party be Republican or Democratic. The party in power necessarily is on the spot because it is charged with the responsibilities of government. It is the function of the minority party to criticize and offer counter proposals. The most astute politicians see that condition and, I believe, are at a loss as to what it means for the future.

The federal communications commission, one of the new agencies set up by the Roosevelt administration as a permanent part of the nation's regulatory structure, is preparing to ask congress for an amendment of the communications act of 1934 enabling it to approve mergers. Of course, the particular problem involved in the communications program is the question of mergers of such gigantic corporations as the Western Union and the Postal telegraph companies and some of the radio companies. The implications and the potentialities of this movement, however, go much further.

It is too early to attempt a forecast of congressional opinion on the communications proposal but it is an opportune time to consider what may happen if congress should approve this step toward creation of single businesses for single lines of service in this country.

It is regarded also as interesting to examine the effect upon the country if it were to be subjected to a well regulated monopoly of all the business in that line such as has occurred in the case of the Bell Telephone system.

Some members of the commission and its staff feel that a merger of the large telegraph companies, for instance, would result in establishment of a more closely knit network of telegraph lines and offices than now exists.

Details of any merger plan are too intricate and too complex to be treated in the space available here but the fact that the communications commission is giving consideration to such a proposal leads on to exploration of merger possibilities and the effect among other lines—such, for example, as the radio, the railroads, the lines of inland waterways, shipping and such other institutions of public service.

Woman's Right to a Second Chance

Widow Surely Entitled to Make Own Choice in the Matter.

Did you read in the newspapers how a woman in China is being honored by the government for refusing to marry after the death of her husband?

"This woman had married at the age of eighteen and after three years her husband died. She refused to marry again and remained a widow for 75 years. Recently her case came under the notice of the magistrate of the district where she lives, and he reported it to the capital of the province. As a result the woman is to be officially honored and given the title 'Model of Virtue.'

"What do you think about that. Is it necessarily a sign of virtue or self-sacrifice for a woman not to marry again?"

The woman writer to whom the above was addressed gave her opinion as follows:

"It's an old Chinese custom that, of honoring a widow for not remarrying. During the republic it went somewhat out of fashion. But in the imperial days a woman who refused to remarry after the death of her husband was regarded always as a model of virtue, and it was the custom when she, too, was gathered to her ancestors, to erect a marble arch over her grave.

"But does failure or refusal to remarry necessarily indicate virtue or extreme devotion to the departed husband? In asking that, our reader expressed the thoughts that came to my mind as I read her letter.

"Assuming that all widows have an opportunity to marry again—and most of them do have it—are there still not other factors that might enter into their preference to remain single, factors that would hardly entitle them in general to the distinction of a marble arch?

"To the modern American woman it is quite conceivable that a woman once married might prefer for quite selfish reasons to retain her freedom. The joys of matrimony having been explored, also the price to be paid for them, it is not at all beyond the bounds of possibility that the freedom of the single life might again attract her.

"We forget, of course, that in the viewpoint of the Chinese woman of the old school a husband can do no wrong, therefore marriage can have no flaws, therefore if she does not remarry, given the opportunity, it must be out of purest virtue and devotion to the dead. So be it."

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

THE novice in wingshooting finds it hard to believe that you must shoot ahead of flying or running targets in order to hit them. He reasons that the speed of the shotgun charge is so fast that one ought to be able to aim dead on the target and hit it. But the fact of the matter is—you simply can't. Actually, the speed of the shotgun charge is not so very fast. It is only about one-third the speed of the modern high-power rifle bullet. In skeet shooting I can frequently hear the shot charge strike the clay target after the report of the gun. Yet the speed of the shot charge is only part of the story.

In America, shooting ahead of your target is called leading it. Without intending to pun, this term is actually misleading. Leading a target implies aiming out in front of the target and swinging along in this position until you judge you are far enough ahead of the target before firing. This is wrong. The right way to do it is to swing on the target from behind it, swing on past it—that is, ahead of it—and shoot after you have passed it. But make up your mind to shoot instantly as you swing ahead of the target. Instead of calling it "leading," the English gunners refer to this as "forward allowance." A more readily understood term, I think.

"Forward allowance" is absolutely necessary, not so much because it takes the shot charge a certain fraction of a second to travel 20, 30, or 40 yards—although this time must be taken into account—but mostly because it also takes time for your eye to register the impression of the target, for your eye to tell your brain to shoot, for your brain to tell your trigger finger to pull, for your trigger finger to snap home, for the hammer to fall, for the primer to explode the powder charge and send the shot hurtling on its way. All this takes time. Very little, to be sure. But remember that the target isn't standing still either. The target may be traveling anywhere from 30 to 90 feet a second, depending on whether it's a rabbit or a canvasback duck. And your shot charge must start towards a point that is ahead of the moving target and in its path.

Only experience will teach you where this point is. No other shooter can tell you exactly. No two shooters function exactly alike in their muscular and nervous reactions. On the skeet field, to the best of my knowledge I believe I shoot at a point about 3 feet ahead of my targets on the crossing shots, and possibly only 2 feet or less on the quartering shots. Just as a tip to you, I will hazard the guess that at least 90 per cent of the targets missed in skeet are shot behind—too far behind.

On a straightaway running rabbit, shoot under him. Shoot 6 inches under his hopping white tail and you'll tumble him every shot. Try a shot on the surface of a pond to see the reason for this. You'll notice that the shot charge strikes the water in a 10-yard long pattern. If you shoot just slightly under your straightaway rabbit you can't miss. On a rabbit running across your line of fire, again shoot just a little low and at a point about 3 or 4 feet ahead of him, depending on how far he is away from you. Remember that the longer the range on any game, the farther ahead you shoot. And the faster the slight of any game, the farther ahead you shoot. On a famous Long Island ducking ground there is an old saying that "if 10 feet seem too much lead, try 20." Which in plain language only means that we seldom miss our game by shooting too far ahead of it. Invariably we miss the target by shooting behind it.

Good shots who are at all conscious of their movements in gun pointing all agree that the best way to swing on a moving target is to come from behind the target, and then at the instant the gun swings past the target to let 'er go. In fact, that last bit of swing past the target, and the trigger pull itself, happen at almost the same instant. Come from behind—swing past—bang! Never stop the swing of your gun. Follow through. To stop your gun as you pull trigger is a fatal mistake—even a hair-line instant pause means that your target has caught up with and passed your forward allowance, and your shot charge goes behind for another miss!

Find Two Sets of Forces

Cause Bands of Jupiter

Study of the bands and spots of the planet Jupiter has convinced scientists the changes in them are caused by two sets of forces—the tidal forces of Jupiter's moons and the changes in the intensity of sunlight. These solar changes also control earthly weather so astronomers are now studying them to determine if weather on earth can be forecast by the changes in the bands and spots on the distant planet.

Looking at Jupiter through a telescope, light and dark bands of a brown or reddish color may be seen. Previous to 1926 these stripes were simple, thin bands very similar to stripes painted on a rubber ball but in two years' time they changed, and after 1928 they appeared as irregular dark bands and had many isolated dark spots.

Now these bands appear to be changing back the way they were.

off. He didn't hop, but walked, and at that distance looked all black. The way he carried himself and his movements as he walked, made Peter think of Creaker the Grackle. In fact, Peter mistook him for Creaker. That was because he didn't really look at him. If he had he would have seen at once that the stranger was smaller than Creaker.

Presently the stranger flew up in a tree, and at once Peter saw that his tail was little more than half as long as that of Creaker. At once it came over Peter that this was a stranger to him. Of course his curiosity was aroused at once. Anything like that is sure to arouse Peter's curiosity. He didn't have any doubt whatever that this was a member of the Blackbird family, but which one it could be he hadn't the least idea. "Jenny Wren will know," thought Peter, and scampered off to hunt her up.

"Who is that new member of the Blackbird family who has come to live in the Old Orchard?" Peter asked as soon as he found Jenny Wren. Jenny's sharp little eyes snapped and she twitched her funny little tail as only she can. "What's that?" she cried.

"Who is that new member of the Blackbird family who has come to live in the old Orchard?" repeated Peter.

"There isn't any new member of the Blackbird family living in the Old Orchard," retorted Jenny Wren tartly.

"There is, too," contradicted Peter. "I saw him with my own eyes. I can see him now. He's sitting in that tree over yonder this very minute. He's all black, so of course he must be a member of the Blackbird family."

"Tut, tut, tut, tut, tut!" scolded Jenny Wren. "Tut, tut, tut, tut, tut! That fellow isn't a member of the Blackbird family at all, and what's more, he isn't black. Go over there and take a good look at him and then come back and tell me if you still think he is black."

Jenny turned her back on Peter and went to hunting worms. There being nothing else to do, Peter hopped over where he could get a good look at the stranger. The sun was shining full on him, and he wasn't black at all. For the most part he was very dark green. At least, that is what Peter thought at first glance. Then, as the stranger moved, he seemed to be a rich purple in places. In short, he changed color. His feathers were like those of Creaker the Grackle—iridescent.

QUESTION BOX

By ED WYNN... The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I just heard of a man who kept company with a woman for sixty years and at last he married her when he was 109 years old. Do you believe this? If so, how do you account for a man marrying at 109 years of age, after going with a woman for 60 years?

Sincerely,

B. WILDERED.

Answer: He probably couldn't hold out any longer.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My son, who is in Bridgeport, Conn., has gotten into some sort of trouble and has been arrested. I have been advised to get a criminal lawyer for him. Are there any criminal lawyers in Bridgeport?

Yours truly,

E. LIZABETH.

Answer: There probably are several, but you'll have a hard time proving it.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I just visited the city of Washington and went to the government buildings. I was particularly interested in the senate chamber. I saw a minister sitting next to the vice president of the United States. Tell me why is the minister there? Does he pray for the senators?

Sincerely,

A. SITESEER.

Answer: No! No! No! The minister does not pray for the senators. The minister takes a look at the senators and then prays for the country.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I met a young lady last week and am very fond of her. We were discussing "kissing" last night and she said that kisses were like a bottle of olives. What did she mean by that?

Sincerely,

OS. Q. LATION.

Answer: Very simple. She means that after you get the first one, the rest come easy.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have traveled all over the world. Everything is hustle bustle. There seems to be no sentiment left in the world. Is there one place in the world where I can find "happiness" and "contentment"?

Yours truly,

PHIL OSOFER.

Answer: There sure is. You can find them both in the dictionary.

Preserved Pears.

Take one pound each of pears and sugar, one pint of water and one lemon. The fruit may be preserved whole, in halves, or quartered. Boil the sugar and water five minutes. Cook the lemon in just water to cover, slicing thin; when tender and transparent add water and all to the pears and sirup and cook until the pears are clear and the sirup is thick. If the hard pears are used cook them in the water until tender and use the water for the sirup. A few cloves and stick cinnamon may be added if desired, and pineapple juice instead of water makes a most delightful flavor.

Pumpkin Preserves.

Remove the rind and seeds from a small pumpkin and cut into inch cubes. Cook in a small amount of water until tender. Drain and weigh. For each pound of pumpkin allow a pound of sugar, two lemons and two ounces of ginger root. Slice the lemon and soak with the ginger overnight in cold water. Next morning cook in the same water until the lemon rind is clear and tender. Add the sugar and pumpkin and simmer until the pumpkin is transparent. Drain, pack in jars. Now Science Explains Why So Many People Past 40

Feel That They're Slipping Losing Their "Grip" on Things

Many people "round 40 think they're "growing old." They feel tired a lot... "weak." Have headaches, dizziness, stomach upsets.

Well, scientists say the cause of all this, in a great many cases, is simply an acid condition of the stomach. Nothing more.

All you have to do is to neutralize the excess stomach acidity.

When you have one of these acid stomach upsets, take Phillips' Milk of Magnesia after meals and before going to bed. That's all!

Try this. Soon you'll feel like another person! Take either the familiar liquid "PHILLIPS'" or the convenient new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets are now on sale at all drug stores everywhere. Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

DRUGS?

Don't make the mistake of giving even a 14-year old boy strong medicines meant for adults.

Boys and girls who have reached their "teens" are not ready to be given powerful drugs!

It is not wise to give laxatives of adult strength to a child, just because you give them less frequently or in less amounts. Many stomach upsets and bowel troubles of growing children can be traced to this single mistake.

Use a liquid laxative containing senna (a natural laxative). California Syrup of Figs has the right amount for children's use, and this rich, fruity syrup does not harm or upset a child's system.

Give that headachy, bilious child a little of this gentle laxative when constipated, and a little less, if dose is repeated until bowels seem to be moving regularly and thoroughly without need of help.

Get the true California Syrup of Figs containing senna and cascara, which will not weaken the bowels or irritate the kidneys. You'll soon have full evidence that it safely relieves constipation in children.

THE "LIQUID TEST." First: select a liquid laxative of the proper strength for children. Second: give the dose suited to the child's age. Third: reduce the dose, if repeated, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

An ideal laxative for this purpose is the pure California Syrup of Figs, but be sure the word "California" is on the bottle.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

LEGION'S DISABLED POLICY IS SOUND

The Legion proposes a sound, conservative program on behalf of the disabled, as exemplified in the statement of future policy, declaring for enactment into law of the principle of universal service in time of war.

We do not seek to place the World War veteran on a pedestal or put them in a class by themselves, but to remove them out of a class of handicap in which they were placed by reason of their service.

With the threat of the Economy League, the American Veterans' Association and allied organizations to reopen the whole problem of the disabled at the next session of Congress it behooves us to enunciate our policy in clear and unmistakable terms, so that the public may know that we advocate compensation solely for our war disabled, with hospitalization when needed; that we ask treatment in government hospitals for non-service cases only when it is actually necessary and where the veteran is unable to pay for private care.

All citizens must be cared for in private or public hospitals, if in need and unable to pay, but we feel that care of the civilian group is a community problem while care of the disabled veterans who fought for all our people is vested with the federal government.

We further insist upon adequate provisions for widows and orphans of our deceased comrades when these dependents are in need of such protection.

The 5% of us detailed to do the fighting for the whole people should not be penalized. Men disabled due to service should be cared for without that as to economic cost, within the ability of a grateful nation to provide for them.

SERVICE TO COMMUNITY OUR WATCH WORD

The American Legion in 1934 has made a great increase in its contribution to the community activities of the State and Nation. It has increased its efforts in behalf of the children of America, who are to be the standard bearers of the next generation. The Legion has, everywhere, joined with other citizens in improving the conditions of their home communities, and, as always, where an emergency has arisen—be it flood, tornado, earthquake, or a fire such as we had at the Union Stock Yards of Chicago—the American Legion has been the first to respond to the call for help. Always in the forefront ready to serve in peace as we served in war.

DO YOU KNOW?

During the world war, 2,515,464 soldiers were admitted to a hospital. As there were 4,122,930 in this branch of service, more than 85 per cent of these soldiers were treated at one time or another for sickness or disease while they served.

Average service of all veterans was just a few days short of one year. Average service of those drawing compensation for service connections was more than 19 months.

25,789 soldiers were discharged for injuries received in battle.

169,039 more were discharged due to disability from diseases.

Brass Tacks

All we're asking is a fair decision in the railroad pension case; 133 railroad companies, the Pullman Company and two express companies declare the railroad pension law passed by an act of Congress is unconstitutional, because it deprives them of their property without "due process of law"—that Congress exceeded its powers. That the act "unlawfully" imposes on them the obligation to pay large sums of money into the treasury of the United States, as contributors to a common fund, for the payment of annuities to old and deserving employees. It is up to the United States Supreme Court to decide if a law is still a law when passed by the Congress and whether or not they are required to sustain it with President Roosevelt, or decide in favor of Wall Street's complaint.

When the district court decided the act was "unconstitutional", there was great rejoicing in Wall Street and its about time there should be a little rejoicing some place else.

The railroad boys are a group of fair and square "give and take" boys. Remember they took a ten per cent wage cut in 1932 and so far have only been able to get two and a half per cent of it back. How about the roads paying that four per cent for each employee into the U. S. treasury, instead of on their pay checks where it belongs as part of the seven and one half per cent still due?

Then the roads will only owe three and one half per cent to the employees. The boys are ready to give up that four per cent in order to get their hard earned pensions. Then the roads would not be paying large sums of THEIR money out and nobody's property would be taken "without due process of law." If any right thinking person can point out anything arbitrary or unreasonable there, I fail to find it. It's time to talk plain facts, that's why I'm using big words. The issue is simply this:

Is Washington, still Washington, or has it moved to New York? When Congress passes a law is it unlawful? Do men like Senator Hatfield and Rep. Keller know when anything is unconstitutional? Did President Roosevelt act as a humanitarian when he signed this law? Are we going to uphold, sustain our President in—remember this—what he had in mind? Let the four per cent the railroads are paying, be the four per cent due the boys on their checks. They'll give it up, and as long as it isn't the property of the roads it should make no difference whether its on the pay check, or in the U. S. Treasury. The boys don't get $150,000.00 a year. Give them their pensions.

Said a young and shaggy aster Just before the Summer's close: "Good gracious Miss Petunia, Just look at Grandma Rose! She's gone and had another flower And there she stands today Attracting the attention of The men who come her way. "Why she was old when I was just a tiny little seed.

If people think her young today they must be blind indeed,

For I remember, as a child, the Phlox's used to say,

That Grandma Rose was aging fast and soon would pass away.

"Now see her smirking at the men and carrying on as though She still were young and beautiful; I'd really like to know

If Grandma Rose believes that she fools anyone at all.

"When Autumn comes the men should know that asters are supreme

We are the chosen of the Lord to end his summer scheme,

But Grandma Rose must play the flirt until her final hour.

Just look at her this morning! She's produced another flower!"

United States Leads With Big Telescopes

Work is now in progress at New-castle on a new 30-inch telescope for Greenwich observatory.

This telescope, it is stated, will be the biggest in use in Britain, but it is much smaller than some of those elsewhere.

In this respect North America leads the world. With the completion recently of the new 69-inch telescope for the Perkins observatory in Delaware, it now has the world's three largest telescopes.

The biggest of all is the 100-inch instrument at the Mount Wilson observatory in California, and the second biggest is 72 inches at the Dominion Astronomical observatory, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

Britain had the earliest of the really big telescopes, a 60-inch specimen, made in 1842. It has now been dismantled, and is at the Science museum at Kensington. It is unlikely that England will have any more telescopes of this size—climatic conditions aren't good enough to justify the expense of making them for a British observatory.—London Answers.

Why Liquid Laxatives Do You No Harm

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement, and with no discomfort at the time, or afterward.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good.

An approved liquid laxative (one which is most widely used for both adults and children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a prescription. It is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help, as they may do in the case of cathartics containing mineral drugs. Ask your druggist for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Sabbath Slumber

"How late do you usually sleep Sunday morning?"
"It all depends."
"Depends on what?"
"The length of the sermon."

If you tire easily—

why not reason out the cause of this unnatural condition?

Your first thought may be, "I must eat more." That's not all. You should enjoy what you do eat. Frequently, the blood cells are low... and this, perhaps, is what makes you feel weak. If this is your trouble the stomach may not be calling for sufficient food. Zest to eat may be lacking. But what a difference S.S.S. makes when taken just before meals. Just try it and notice how your appetite and digestion improve.

S.S.S. stimulates the flow of gastric juices and also supplies the precious mineral elements so necessary in blood-cell and hemo-globin up-building. Do try it. It may be the rainbow you need to brush away present discouragement over your health condition.

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is your guarantee of satisfaction.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

"I can't wait to see you on the storeroom shelf," she said aloud. "Come on, I'll put you there." She lifted the tray. "Ooch, but you weigh a ton! Am I one good little back-to-the-lander?" as she started toward the cellar door. "A squirrel storing nuts for the winter has nothing on—"

A thunderous knock resounded through the house. Prudence took a quick step forward. A frightened cat reached the same spot in one leap. The girl tripped, the tray tipped, the jars of beets struck the floor with a crash calculated to make the pilot of the last word in bombing planes pale with envy.

Ruby liquid flew in all directions. It dripped from walls and ceiling; it splashed the white floor; it trickled in crimson rivulets down Prue's cheeks; it did a modernistic design on her shoes and lavishly polka-dotted her bare arms. For an instant she stood in dazed consternation, then as she saw her face reflected in a small mirror, she laughed.

"Oh, you demon can-can!" The words choked into a spasm of mirth. She sank to a chair, dropped her head to her arms flung out on the table, and tried to control the peals of laughter which shook her. A hand caught her shoulder.

"Hey! What's happened? Quit laughing like that! You'll go goofy in a minute."

Lips twitching, nostrils quivering, eyes gleaming through tears, Prudence looked up at Rodney Gerard.

"C-canning trouble!" She choked on the words.

Gerard administered an authoritative shake.

"Stop laughing. It's painfully evident that you are topping on the brink of hysterics. I know of only one sure remedy for that. I should hate to do it—but I may feel obliged to kiss you."

Prudence was on her feet. "Just naturally helpful, aren't you? You wouldn't dare—" She met his eyes and changed her tone. "I'll stop, Signor Mussolini. Only you could stand there like a graven image in the midst of this—this slaughter. You see, I've gone thrifty. I've been preparing for the long hard winter by canning young, tender beets—no t-baste to them when they g-grow up. I was carrying the jars on a tray when a thun-thunderous knock sent Cleopatra scurrying to cover—Cleopatra's the cat, in case you don't know—with the result of a foot-on collision. I—"

"Stop and get your breath. Hysterics will get you if you don't watch out." The hint of amused warning in Gerard's voice set Prue's pulses throbbing.

"They won't. I shan't need your prescription, thank you. Why are you here? It would be you, wouldn't it? What did you come for? My word! I believe it was your knock that brought on the catastrophe. Are you responsible for this mess?" She indicated the smeared room with an accusing wave of her hand.

"I'm sorry. Can't I help clean up?" "You can not. Macky will be down in a few minutes, then we'll do it together. You'd better go while the going is good. Why did you come? I haven't time to talk even lumber business in the morning. I'm a working girl. I wish you'd go."

Even as Prudence frowned at him, she was thinking how Fate conspired to block her. After Jean's intimation that she was setting her cap for him, she had sworn to herself that she would chill Rodney Gerard to the bone the next time he spoke to her; instead, here she was hysterical with laughter, friendly laughter. One couldn't be impressively dignified when one resembled nothing so much as an example of spatter-work done in beet juice.

Hands in his coat pockets, Gerard strode to the door, turned at the threshold.

"Stop scowling. I'm going. Hostile, aren't you? I came to ask if you would have time to make a silver collar for that kitten of Jean's she's so crazy about."

"A silver collar! I'd love it! I've had an idea for one in my mind for months! I'll make time! Come on to the shop—I've turned Uncle Austin's office into a workroom—and I'll show you a sketch I made before I became a farmer."

She had not realized how she loved and had missed her craft, Prudence told herself, as she led the way to a room which opened from the front hall.

"It won't take me a jiffy to find that sketch." She flung the assurance over her shoulder at Gerard. She pulled open one of the doors of the bookcase. A pile of papers showered to the floor.

"Darn! Wouldn't you know it when I'm in a hurry!" "Hold on! I'll get them!" Gerard dropped to one knee beside her. "I don't wonder you can't find anything in that mess."

"It is a sight. I tuck everything I don't know what to do with in there. Here's the sketch! Now I'll find the stones."

Gerard laid the papers he had collected on top of a pile while Prudence manipulated the knob of a small safe. He stood beside her as the heavy door swung open.

"What are those white things?" He indicated the row of packets in one of the compartments.

"Stones. Some precious, some semi-precious."

"You must have a fortune there."

"Not a fortune, but more money than I can afford to have tied up in them. I'm a jelly-fish, I have no sales resistance. When I see a lovely gem, I have an attack of what the economists call 'Buyer's delirium.' These are the most valuable, though I have a pigeon-blood ruby and a cabochon sapphire which couldn't be called grubby."

"That's a corking emerald."

"It is choice, it's flawless. It was my grandmother's."

"What's that stuff in the bottles which looks like hunks of colored glass?"

"Enamels. Transparent and opaque. They are ground in a little water to salt-like consistency in that mortar, washed thoroughly before they are applied to metal, and heated until they melt. When I want them especially jewel-like I use them over gold leaf. I can't enamel here, worse luck. Can't get enough heat. Have to use a bel-lows and a big blow pipe."

"You sure know this job, don't you? What are you looking for in those papers?"

"Here they are! Here's the design for the collar. See those medallions between the links?" She looked up.

"You're not listening! You're not looking!"

"I'm looking all right. Never realized before how much red there is in your hair. The sunlight brings it out. It's gorgeous, girl."

"My hair! I thought you came here for a silver collar."

"I did. Cross-my-throat-an'-hope-to-die, I did. You love this work, don't you? Your eyes are like stars."

"Of course I love it, but I get tremendously thrilled over whatever interests me."

"You'll wear yourself out."

"Better to wear out than rust out."

"Meaning me, I suppose?"

"If the shoe fits, put it on. Do you realize that you are wasting my precious time? I thought you were about to give me an honest-to-goodness order."

Gerard laid his hand on the sketch.

"Don't put it away. I do want the collar. You were explaining about the medallions between the links. Will they be silver?"

"Yes. They are to be carved and tooled with Micky Mouse episodes. See these cat's-eyes glow and smolder? I'll set them in silver to alternate with the medallions. This pear-shaped piece of Korean amber—which is supposed to contain magic—will hang from the buckle in front. Like the idea?"

"You're a fraud. You ask that as anxiously as if you didn't know it was a knock-out. Of course I like it." He carefully lifted the paper on which lay the emerald and some diamonds.

"I like these, too. Any chance of your making this ring up to order?"

Did he want it to give to a girl? The thought flashed through Prue's mind even as she shook her head.

"Not a chance, even if I had money to invest in baguette diamonds, which I haven't. It has been one of the dreams of my life to wear that ring. Unless Prosperity farm plunges so deep into the red that we can't pull it out, I'll hold on to the emerald."

She thoughtfully nibbled the point of the engraving tool.

"The silver collar for the kitten is likely to be rather expensive. I can't set a price because I have no idea how much time it will take."

"That's all right. I'll give it to Jean for Christmas. Think you'll have it done by then?"

"Christmas! I hope so, but, of course, if I have many morning interruptions—"

"I accept your delicate hint. I'm off. It won't interrupt your work, I hope, if I stop to collect Jean and the kitten and speak to your brother, who is lying on the grass patch in the middle of the garden?"

"David on the ground! I left him—"

Prudence fairly flew through the house. She heard Gerard behind her as she raced into the garden. Dave on the ground!

She dropped to her knees beside him.

"Dave! Dave! Did you fall?"

With a murmur of concern, he sat up and put his arm about her.

"Prue! Prue. Of course I didn't fall, dear. After a while the chair seemed hard and the grass inviting, so I flung the rug on the ground and stretched out on it. I've been asleep." He tightened his hold. "Look here, my dear, if you have me on your mind every minute, I'll go off by myself somewhere. Give me a hand up, Gerard. I've been lying here so long that I'm stiff."

Rodney Gerard linked an arm in his as he stood up. Prudence was conscious of the tension about her mouth as she looked at them. David's face was so pale in comparison to that of the man beside him. She achieved a fair imitation of a laugh.

"Have you on mind every minute, Dave! You'd be surprised if you knew that I haven't thought of you once since I tucked you into that steamer chair. Now who's coming?"

The gate in the white picket fence which enclosed the garden creaked on its hinges. A grotesque figure turning cartwheels with incredible rapidity hurtled through the opening, came right-side up, scratched a chalky ear which protruded through his white skull cap, and made a sweeping bow.

Jean raced to her uncle.

"A clown! Uncle Rod, a clown! Where's the circus?"

Had Rodney Gerard gritted an exclamation between his teeth, or had she imagined it? Prudence looked from his narrowed eyes to the smeared blue eyebrows, the lips like a bloody gash in the whiteness of the chalk-face of the man who was looking back at him. The regulation white suit of the sawdust ring, polka-dotted with black, showed traces of travel.

Jean's eyes were like stars. "Oh, Uncle Rod! Isn't he a peach! You will take me to the circus, won't you?"

David Schuyler held out his hand and smiled.

"How are you, Chicot? Must be two years since I've seen you. Where did you drop from?"

The clown shook Schuyler's hand. He blinked and swallowed, turning his cone-shaped cap in chalky hands.

"Never expected to see you here sir. They told me at the Rescue mission that you was sick somewhere. I'm with Sassoon's Smashing show. It's stuck in a nearby town, and when the boss found I—I'd once lived in this region, he thought I might have a drag with folks and sent me on a motorcycle to drum up trade."

His eyes shifted to Rodney Gerard.

"The little girl would like the show, Mister. It's a swell show."

"Uncle Rod, you will take me, won't you?" Jean's lips quivered with eagerness. "I've never seen many horses! I've never been to a circus! Mother thinks they're cheap. Oh, Miss Prue, ask him to take me, please—he'll do it if you ask him."

Significance shone through the amusement in Rodney Gerard's eyes as they met Prue's. Only an instant their glances met, before he parleyed indulgently:

"Take it easy, Jean. You've got me all excited. You've started something, Chicot. You said the show was stuck in the next town. What's the trouble?"

Again Prudence had the sense of an undercurrent, a dramatic undercurrent at that. Gerard's curt question seemed to set atmospheric high-potency waves in motion. Was he angry? Annoyed was a better word. Whatever his mood, it tightened her nerves. The clown crushed his cap in one vein-knotted hand.

"It's this way, Mister. The next town we were billed in was cleaned out by fire. Our show keeps up with our paper, rain or shine, floods or knee-deep mud, but when the town itself goes blooey, what have you? That throws us out. So the boss says we'd lay out the show in the burg I've come from. It's a good honest show for the little girl to see, Mister."

He pulled at a painted forelock, looked at Prudence with haggard eyes, stretched the red gash in a grin.

"An' for big girls, too. We've had to turn away crowds all season, and the parade—whoops, you should see the parade! All the headlines out—and the callopie. Sounds this-a-way—"

Chicot gave an imitation which set the echoes jangling. It brought Si Puffer from the barn on a run. His wife and Miss Mack spilled from the kitchen door.

"You said the show was in a nearby town, Chicot. How near?"

Prudence caught the swift glance between Rodney Gerard and Mrs. Puffer as he asked the question, was aware of the sound of gas escaping from a punctured balloon, before she closed her lips and retreated, pulling Jane Mack with her into the house. Did the clown's presence mean something to her, too?

"Sure it's nearby. Only fifty miles, Mister. I wish all you folks would come. The little girl would get a great kick from it."

"Oh, Uncle Rod—" Jean's voice broke from excitement.

"Take it easy, Jean, we'll go. What time does the parade start, Chicot?"

"Nine."

"We'll be there. Prue, Jean and I are counting on you to keep us company."

"I'd love it—if—" Prue's eyes flashed to her brother.

"Of course you'll go, Prue. You haven't been away from this town since you came, have you? Jane Mack will look after me." David Schuyler answered her unspoken question.

The clown twisted his cap. "I wish you'd come, sir. It's a good show."

"Can't make it, Chicot. Glad you have your job again. Watch your step—this time."

"Thank you, sir. I will, sir. There ain't no occasion for me not to, sir. Well, folks, I'll be seeing you."

He pulled his cap hard over his ears, and departed on his hands, his legs in the air. Jean ran beside him, pelting him with questions, going into girlish giggles of laughter. As the clown disappeared through the gateway, Rodney Gerard and Si Puffer followed without one backward glance.

Prudence dropped to the grass beside her brother.

"Strange that you should have known that clown, Dave."

"All sorts of men came to the Rescue mission, Prue. Chicot was in great trouble about a granddaughter who had been running wild. He beat up one of her followers—to hear him tell it, she had a lot of them—and lost his job for a while."

"Hey! What's Happened?"

Prudence appeared absorbed in her search for a four-leaf clover.

"Dave, did it occur to you that Mrs. Si knew that clown, that Rodney Gerard knew him?"

Schuyler swung his feet from the chair and rose. The lines between his eyes deepened as he answered gravely:

"I'm sorry to say it did, Prue. Confoundably sorry."

Continent of Atlantis

Was Surrounded by Sea

The lost continent of Atlantis was entirely surrounded by sea. It existed, supposedly, between the Straits of Gibraltar and the Mexican Gulf. It had been a great empire of tall, fair-haired, blue-eyed men and women. Alleged historical accounts agree that it was inhabited by supermen who lived peacefully and happily over a long period of years. The arts of civilization of the present race were acquired, according to historians, from this lost race before it vanished beneath the sea. A description of the lost continent has been furnished by Plato.

"The whole country," he relates, "was very lofty and precipitous on the side of the sea, but the country immediately about and surrounding the city was a level plain, itself surrounded by mountains; it was smooth and even, but of an oblong shape, extending in one direction 3,000 stadia, and going up the country from the sea through the center of the island 2,000 stadia; the whole region of the island lies toward the south and is sheltered from the north. The surrounding mountains were celebrated for their number and size and beauty, in which they exceeded all that are to be seen anywhere."

Wooden Plows

Wooden plows are not only still common, but efficient for their task. On some clay lands they are preferred to iron because the clay does not stick to them so much, says Tit-Bits Magazine. They are most common in East Anglia, and at Maldon, Essex, there is a firm that has been making them for 120 years. To this day they exhibit and sell them at shows such as the "Royal," where they take their place among the most up-to-date electrical and petrol appliances.

On the Funny Side

NOT YET DISTURBED

"They are asking how you got your money," said the friend. "That's all right," answered Senator Sorghum. "It will be time enough to worry when they begin to figure on how to get it away from me."

Wrong Party

Stranger—I want to buy a good farm.

Real Estate Broker—You've come to the right place, sir. What's your business?

Stranger—I'm a farmer.

Broker—Oh, we have no good farms for farmers! I thought you were a city chap.—Montreal Star.

And a Careless One

He—You're good at conundrums, try this one.

She—Sure, go ahead.

He—Take away my first letter, take away my second letter, take away all my letters, and I am still the same. What am I?

She—That's easy. You're a mail-carrier.—Milwaukee Medical Times.

Practical Enforcement

"What's the idea of going down the street at 10 o'clock each night and shooting out the lights?" asked the traveling salesman.

"Crimson Gulch has a curfew law," answered Cactus Joe, "and us respectable citizens are going to see that it's obeyed."

The Injustice of It

All through dinner Percy sat so silent that his parents at last began to wonder what was troubling him.

"Pa," he said at last, "do school teachers get paid?"

"Of course they do, sonny," replied father.

"Then it's not fair," burst out the small boy, indignantly. "Why should the teachers get paid when us kids do all the work?"

GRAVE ERROR

"Brown doesn't seem to manage so well as a pedestrian. I thought he owned a car."

"He does, but he made the mistake of teaching his wife and daughter to drive."

Neck-and-Neck Contest

"I don't know what to give my father for his birthday. Sometimes the idea to give him a shirt wins out, then the thought of a cigarette case seems to be the choice."

"How will it end?"

"Oh, I suppose it will be a tie."

Useless Discussion

"Which do you prefer, money or brains?"

"There's no use to bother about making a choice," answered Miss Cayenne. "A person is uncommonly lucky not to find himself without either."

Honor

"Mrs. Buntie," said the bank cashier, "your account is overdrawn $42.29."

"Dear me!" exclaimed Mrs. Buntie, "I'll attend to it right away."

As good as her word, she straightway wrote and mailed to the bank a check for $42.29.

Time Limit Expired

Customer—You said the tortoise I bought from you would live 200 years, and it died the day after I bought it.

Shopkeeper—Now, isn't that too bad! The 200 years must have been up.

Cause for Murder

Traveler—What do you do, my good man?

Announcer—I call trains.

Traveler—Well, call me one; I'm in a hurry.

Here's Slip That Has "Everything"

PATTERN 1897

There are only a few things that we can count on in this funny old world, but one of them is that no woman ever really has enough slips. She just gets all set when along comes a new frock and the whole business has to be done over again. With this pattern she is prepared for any emergency. It is no trouble to make, fits beautifully, and it is shadow-proof—just about all any dress can ask of the slip which goes under it. It is nice in white and simply grand in a color to go under transparent dresses.

Pattern 1897 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 3½ yards 39-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York City.

BAD BUSINESS

Charitable Lady—Here, my poor fellow, is a quarter for you. It must be terrible to be lame, but I think it must be worse to be blind.

Panhandler—You're right, ma'am. When I was blind, people was always handin' me counterfeit money.

—Pathfinder Magazine.

The Young Mind

"Mother, is grandma grandpa's wife?" asked little Edith.

"Yes, of course," answered the mother.

A few minutes elapsed and the child said: "Why did he marry such an old woman?"

INFORMATION QUEST

"Ma."

"What is it, Susie?"

"Is a sweet tooth a tooth from a honey comb?"

Yes, Daddy Followed

"Did your wife's father follow you when you eloped?"

"I should say so; he's living with us yet."

Fortunate

Poet—Darling, I love you more than words can tell.

She—Good. I was afraid you were going to write another poem for me.

In Memoriam

NEIMAN—Henry. In loving memory of our dear husband and father, who passed away one year ago, October 31st, 1933:
The face we loved is now laid low,
His loving voice is stilled;
The hand we so often clasped
Lies now in death's cold chill.
We often sit and think of you
When we are all alone;
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.
LOVING WIFE AND FAMILY

Jr. Vice Pres. Mildred Anderson
Chaplain, Lois Neidringhaus
Secretary, Jeane Lockwood
Treasurer, Merle Hall
Conductress, Anna Becker
Guard, Luella Tyler
Flowers and gifts were presented to the installing officers and color bearers. Mrs. Eastham presented a past president's pin to Mrs. Rachel Slagle.

Mrs. Ringer was the acting secretary.
At the conclusion of the Auxiliary installation, the officers of the Wm.
Martin Post V. F. W. were installed with Wm. Bollig of the Cantigny Post of the V. F. W. Joliet as the installing officer. Officers installed were:

Commander, Floyd Slagle
Sr. Vice-Com. Henry Tyler
Jr. Vice-Com. Lester Vanderboegh
Chaplain, Fred Steinhagen
Officer of the Day, A. C. Becker
Quartermaster, Wm. H. Lockwood
Adjutant, Arthur C. Schiller
Guard, Fred Hentsch
Sentinel, Sylvester Tyler
The new commander was presented with a commanders pin and the retiring commander with a past commander's pin.

Mrs. Rachael Slagle on behalf of the Auxiliary presented gifts to the out going and incoming commanders.
Addresses were made by Commander Boyer, Chicago Heights Post,
Commander Leimbacher, Cantigny
Post, Joliet, Past Commander For-mento of the same post, Commander
Richard Bowles, Wm. Grant Post,
Past Commander John Jones, Wm.
Martin Post, Past Commander Sylvester Tyler, of the same post, commander Rosenbaum of Joliet, Henry
F. Marquard, Judge Advocate General of the V. F. W.

The latter in his address stated that the V. F. W. had been offered 500,000 francs by the city of Paris,
France, if they would hold their 1935 encampment in that city, but that the V. F. W. had declined to do so unless France paid up her obligations due the United States.

The V. F. W. now has 187 posts in Illinois with 18,000 paid up members. Throught the country and in foreign lands there are 3,134 posts with a total paid up membership of 300,000.

As a special token of respect four war mothers of the Lincoln Estates were given seats of honor on the speakers platform. These mothers were: Mrs. Valentine, Mrs. Walker,
Mrs. Becker and Mrs. Neidringhaus.

At the close of the installing ceremonies at 7:30 p. m. luncheon was served following which dancing was enjoyed. A. M. Elphick of the Lincoln Estates furnishing the music.
